The Roy Martin House

Lisbon

Private

nineteenth century

The Roy Martin House faces south on the north side of Route 144 in Lisbon, just west of the Dorsey John House. It is a four bay wide, one room deep, two story high, gabled roof (running east-west) house of charmingly modest scale, which holds a central interior brick chimney and interior enclosed staircase, north of this chimney.

Rectangular entrances are located in the end bays of the south wall. A two story high, intersecting gable roof (running north-south) frame, twentieth century, kitchen wing extends from the west side of the building's north wall, creating an "L" plan. An enclosed one story high, shed roofed vestibule runs along the remainder of the north wall.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Roy Martin house faces south on the north side of Route 144 just east of the of the Dorsey-John House.

It is a four bay wide, one room deep, two story high, gabled roof (running east-west) modestly scaled frame siding building. Rectangular south entrance doors are located in the end bays; a fifteen light door in the east bay and a four light entrance in the west bay. Vertically aligned and proportionally scaled fenestration is almost entirely double hung, with two-over-two lights.

A one story high, shed roofed open porch runs along the entire south elevation supported by four square posts connected by a low railing.

The scale of the house is one of its most outstanding features. The height of the porch measures only some six feet. This coupled with the low railing upon entering the porch as well as the low ceilings of the interior result in a charm which is almost unique among the homes of Lisbon. Upon investigation of the interior, this was not a double house with central chimney but a one family house with staircase located on the east wall of the west room, just north of the central chimney.

A two story high, gabled roof (running north-south) kitchen wing was added on the west side of the building's north wall. Along the remainder of this north wall has been constructed an enclosed, one story high shed roofed vestibule. Still another addition extends from the east wall of the log house. This is a cinder block, one story high, shed roofed structure with rectangular south entrance.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Roy Martin House is significant historically and architecturally to the village of Lisbon.

Architecturally, it is significant as an example of turn of the century frame construction of a very modest and exceptionally pleasing scale. It features proportionally scaled and vertically aligned fenestration as well as interior mantle pieces and an enclosed staircase. In addition, many original window panes remain. Not only its architectural integrity but its importance to the streetscape along the north side of Route 144 are of the utmost importance. This little house links the post office to the old brick house, known as the Dorsey-John House and serves as an anchor to the northwest corner of Pancoast Alley and Route 144.

Historically, it was constructed sometime after 1878, for the Hopkins Atlas of that year does not indicate the present location of the building on this lot. In 1878 it belonged to John P. Hall who paid $1,600 for the property on April 26, 1872.

The four lots; 13, 14, 63 and 64 of Lisbon subdivision, which take up the west side of Pancoast Alley on the Hopkin's Atlas Map, passed from John Hall to Nickolas Henderson (May 21, 1884 - 48-82) and from Nickolas Henderson to Sarah Ann Hook (Oct. 8, 1884 - 48-540). By 1897 the Slagle family had acquired the property and held it until 1929 when Mr. & Mrs. Arthur Poole had it conveyed to them.

Significant architecturally to Lisbon for its architectural integrity, as well as for its role as an integral part of the human scale which dominates the streetscape on the north side of Route 144, the Roy Martin House serves as an important element in the architectural fabric of the village of Lisbon. Its interior arrangement, the style of its mantles and the wide 12" floor boards upstairs, indicate early construction and the possibility of the house having a nineteenth century construction date.
